HOME BUILDERS GATHER FORCES AGAINST GREED

American Loan Institute Combats Operations of Bogus Promoters

SEEKING TO PROTECT INVESTORS FROM LOSS

Points Out That Extortionate Fees Add Extensively to Cost of Building

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (Special Correspondence)--"High pressure" promoters attempting to "modernize" the old-fashioned building and loan association through collection of Jarge fees that weaken the earning power of the investors' dollars are being combated vigorously by the American Savings, Building and Loan

American Savings, Building and Loan Institute in several states.

High fees ranging from five to 10 per cent of the matured value of the stock are reported to the Institute which says, through the Bulletin its official pube ation, that where any fee at all is necessary it should not properly exceed one per cent, or at the most two per cent. The Institute works in co-operation with the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations whose 12,000 members financed construction of 500,000 American homes in 1925.

It is pointed out that promotional groups are riding into personal profit on the good name of the established building and loan associations, known for the small margin of profits on which they do business and for the nearly negligible number of failures within their ranks. The South is reported at present to be the chief field of activities for the large-fee promoters. The Bulletin says:

Driven Out of Florida

Last winter a large number of these promoters were driven out of Florida by the State League, acting in co-operation with the State Comp-troller and using the expert staff of the Institute to prove the soundness or unsoundness of the various plans in use.

"These men scattered to other states in the South and as they wid-ened their field they have attracted ened their field they have attracted others to the same scheme. These newcomers for the most part know very little about building and loan principles and care less. Their entire interest lies in selling as large a block of installment stock as possible, cashing their commission checks, and moving on to other fields.

Better Understanding Sought "The attainment of a better under the purposes and idea the purposes and idea."

The Bulletin reports that the salesmen receive 1½ to 2½ per cent as their commissions, the promoter taking as much of the balance as ho can pocket through various subteringes. The smount of the fee charged in at least two reported cases depended whoily on the ability of the salesmen to induce the investor to part with his earnings. Cards of three colors were carried by the salesmen, one covering a 5 per cent the salesmen, one covering a 5 per cent to per cent.

Better Understanding Sought

"The attainment of a better understanding of the purposes and ideals of the people of the United States by Latin America is a problem that cannot be solved by official government action," Dr. Rowe said. "This great need, of such vital importance to the future of our country, can only be accured through a large and comprehensive program formulated and carried out by our universities and carried out by national scientific and civil or the people of the United States by Latin America is a problem that cannot be solved by official government action," Dr. Rowe said. "These exorbitant fees," says the Bulletin, "are usually soid on the basis of participation in some large future earnings of the association. The salesman is somewhat vague as to the source of these large earnings, although he frequently uses figures showing great increases in value of stocks of banks and other corporations which were originally sold at a premium. It is customary for such men to overlook the fact that many months must elapse before the buyer can have as much to his credit on the books of the association as the amount of money he has parted with. Question Use of Power

"They are all conscious of the great economic and political power which the United States has acquired," he said, and "there is a natural and constant questioning as to the use which we propose to make of this power. History has taught them that no nation in the past has ever enjoyed such far-reaching power as is today enjoyed by the United States, without abusing it, and they are therefore constantly asking themselves whether the United States will prove an exception to the rule."

A century has elapsed since the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine, Dr. Rowe recalled. The continued-maintenance of that doctrine by the United States, he said, has eliminated for the Latin-American lands the apprehension of aggression (Continued as Page 3, Column 1)

NEW YORK, Aug. 6—Complete inancial returns of the nation's rail-lows: Eastern, $264,143,672, $234,091, financial returns of the nation's railroads for the first half of 1926, just made public by the Bureau of Railway Economics, confirm earlier reports that the period was the most prosperous in their history.

The heavy business and favorable net operating income for June were shown to have raised records for the period to new high levels. The large period to new high levels. The large gains in net operating results tell a story of achievement in the way of economies and efficiency of operation which railway officials regard as marking a recovery from the post-war phase in their operations.

The gross revenues for the period, according to the bureau's report, were $3,028,560,861, amounting to nearly $132,000,000 more than for the same period last year, or an increase of about 4.4 per cent. The net operating income was $494.866.775, an increase of more than $55,000,000, or 12.5 per cent over the 1925 period.

Profits of $1,200,000,000 in Sight According to the nominal seasonal variation of traffic the earnings for the first half of the year will contribute about 42 per cent of the year's total, and the last half, as a consequence of the heavy fall traffic is expected to contribute more than 58 per cent. If the same ratio of inwith $1,136,000,000 for 1925, the bureau said.

The net operating income for June, which set a new record for that month, was $107,335,655, compared with $2,145,755 in June, 1925, a record return at that time. This represents by the do for the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere what the Rhodes scholarship in the United States for Latin-American students, to do for the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere what the Rhodes scholarship in trust has songht to do for Angio-Saxon nations.

Sympathetic governmental action is insufficient, Dr. Rowe said, to secure complete understanding between the people of the United States and Central and South America. To supplement official efferts, he urged action by American universities and national scientific and civil groups. This action, he said, should take the form of the establishment of scholarships throughout the United States.

It was in 1897, a generation ago, that the Rev. Dr C. W. Gordon, known the world over as Ralph Connor, wrote his first story, "Black Reck." At that time he was a young missionary preacher in the Canadian Rockies and took to fiction in order to stir up interest among the church people in the East. FRENCH HASTEN RATIFICATION OF DEBT ACCORD

Government May Ask Parliament to Ratify Agreements Before Vacation

By Special Cable PARIS, Aug. 6-The Government

may yet decide to ask Parliament to ratify the accords with Washington and London before vacation. Such is the somewhat unexpected news which comes from an authoritative quarter. The ministers have changed their opinion several times and Raymond Poincaré, the Premier, after hesitation, appears convinced by the arguments of Aristide Briand and M. Bokanowski who desire to obtain an early settlement of the vexed question. It is not until Monday that the matter will be officially considered, but certainly the prospects of Indorsement are brighter.

If M. Poincaré represents to the Chamber the absolute need of a favorable vote the deputies will undoubtedly acquiesce. A careful study of the situation seems to show that the program of monetary restoration cannot be realized without a debt settlement. It is said that firm promises of financial help with tempting conditions have been made by London, Amsterdam and New York, but it is contingent on appro-bation of the Bérenger and Caillaux

Poincaré has proceeded from M. Poincaré has proceeded from measure to measure with unexampled speed, and it is better that all the problems be now faced. Yesterday the Chamber passed at a single afternoon's sitting the project of a sinking fund and commercialization of the tobacco monopoly by 420 votes against 140, and in a single night sitting an authorization to enter into agreements with the Banque de France, which will purchase gold values by 365 votes against 181.

There is little advantage in postponement. The proposal to send André Tardieu to Washington has not been dropped, but if such a visit is ever arranged it would have refrecepted merely to resservations. It is is ever arranged it would have ref-erence merely to reservations. It is useless to disguise that the debt question is peculiarly delicate and the Bérenger accord extremely un-popular. It is certain that a final so-lution of the problem will not be ob-tained, whatever parliamentary ac-tion is now taken. It is announced that Henry Bérenger will sail to resume his post Saturday.

Not to Approve Loans Unless Debt Is Ratified

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, Aug. 6-Rumors that a large loan to France is under interests brought from the Treasury micials a reiteration of the Treasury officials a reliteration of the Treasury declaration of a year ago against any loans from American sources prior to ratification of a satisfactory debt agreement with the United States, as an essential first step by France for putting its financial house in order.

Garrard B. Winston, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, declared emphatically that there has been no change in the Treasury policy of withholding approval for foreign loans to countries which have not yet ratified agreements for funding their debts to the United States. At the same time he pointed out that French opinion is apparently veering around to the view expressed in the recent report of the special committee of French finance experts, which recommended foreign loans to other private bankers may make to the French Government, and officials here will look favorably upon such action, it was indicated.

Officials are unwilling to comment on the possibility of revision of the Mellon-Bérenger pact. Mr. Winston explained that the American Debt Funding Commission has no authority to consider possible changes which the French might suggest. The only method by which the terms could be changed would be for the Sante to introduce amendments when the bill comes up for a vote. If the French Parliament should also change some of its terms, negotiations might have to be carried on through the State Department in order to come to an agreement.

marines for instance were to be considered as a defensive weapon this might have created a new startling situation as regards the problem of the limitation of naval disarmament.

The British view that such a proposal was inadmissible finally carried the day and the French expert in the end agreed to limit the list of defensive armaments to a comparatively small number.

The plenary subcommittee met again in the afternoon to receive the report of the three experts and the vexed problem of what constitutes the difference between offensive and defensive armaments may now be considered settled.

The ground is, therefore, clear for a discussion of question 6, which deals with the problem of a reduction in military aircraft and whether it is practical to arrive at a computation of the value of civil aircraft in estimating the air strength of a country. in estimating the air strength of a country. This is likely to lead to the most important debate.

Needs Only to Continue Its Present Policy, in Opinion of Harvard Man

Coupled with high standards of living and resourceful methods of production, the present prosperity of the United States can be made to continue indefinitely, without apprehension of a future overpopulation of the Nation or its industries, said Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of economics at Harvard University and author of "The Conservation of its encouragement of intelligence, its equality of opportunity, and its liberality of wages, these things will contribute to the maintenance of a nigh standard of living, and this high standard of living will prevent the Nation from ever becoming overpopulated," said Professor Carver.

He predicated this upon the economists' definition of "standard of living." This, he explained, consists not merely of a statistical account of what goods the average person or family possesses, but of what income, education, savings, or goods come, education, savings, or goods the average persons will insist upon having before they will marry, es-tablish homes, and rear familles.

After outlining also how the additions to cultivated acreage of land and the expansion of commerce might provide, and in fact, have provided, for great increases in popu-lation of the more progressive countries, the Harvard economist noted that little additional land has been brought into cultivation in the United States during the last few years, but denied emphatically that the popula-tion of America is anywhere near its limit of food supply.

"Agricultural economists agree," he said, and Professor Carver is one of the foremost of these, since he has been an adviser to the United States Department of Agriculture, "that the only problem in the next century in the United States is going to be to find buyers for the foodstuffs which we are able to grow. When we do outgrow that situation, if we ever do. important, to increase the production per man." Professor Carver said. "Intensive agriculture means poverty to the workers. The production per man is small. The reason we in America pay higher wages than do the European countries which boast of high yields per acre is that we produce food in proportion to the

Turning to another phase of the population question, Professor Carver observed that there is such a

Experts Advise Situation Is Grave, and Urge Planting as Indigenous Forests Grow More Inadequate-

Julius, has drawn public attention to Australia's inadethe remarkably low forest area in is at the top with 52.20, Japan next, 48.33; then Russia (in Europe) 39; Austria, 31.66; Hungary, 20.30; Germany, 25.90; France, 18.65, and Australia. 5.26.

It has been computed that the annual wood requirement of Australia is 180 super feet per annum per head of the population on a basis of 6,000,-000 people, or a total of 1.080,000,000 super feet per annum of which one half is imorted. At the end of 60 years a population of 25,000,000 ust be provided for, needing 4,500,-0,000 super feet of log timber.

The forest reservations of Australia, as laid down by the Hobart forestry conference, provide for the dedication in perpetuity of 24,500,-000 acres of forest areas, or 1.14 of the total land surface. The indigenous forests are, says Mr. Julius. notoriously sparsely stocked, and it is contended that the annual wood increment from the 24,500,000 acres of natural forest will be utterly in-adequate to supply the demand, especially as the dwindling resources of countries from which Australia obtains supplies render it impossible compelled to conserve supplies to meet her own requirements.

Pine from California

Mr. Julius regards it as fortunate therefore, that certain quick-growing exotic conifers (which wood forms the bulk of the importations) have been proved to do so well in certain parts of Australia. The Monterey, or Remarkable pine, introduced from California, has attained a rate of growth in Australia's southern latithat far exceeds anything known in the Northern Hemisphere.

Although South Australia pos-sesses the lowest percentage of forest land of all the Australian states adaptability to the growth of the conifers lie potentialities that, energetically developed, will solve, insists Mr. Julius, the timber supply problem in Australia, for it does not appear that in any other portion of Australia does there exist such com-bination of favorable factors necessary for the mass production of soft wood as in South Australia. The forest area of South Australia is estimated at 3.800,000 acres, being approximately 1.56 per cent of the area of the State. Of this it is computed that 1.050,000 acres carry timber of commercial value. Preparations for an annual planting pro-gram of 5000 acres are now in hand. The planting program of South Aus-The planting program of South Australia has now placed it in the unique position of being capable, at the completion of the rotation, of supplying its own needs in wood requirements from the annual increments of the forest, leaving the capital stock intact, even calculating upon the natural increase of population. The adoption of a 5000-acre per annum planting schedule will help to stabilize the position in Australia, as South Australia will, under

It is understood that little difference of opinion exists between the forestry and park service, the aim being to satisfy as nearly as possible the ma-jority of interests, whether they be economic or otherwise. Rumania Genuinely Poor

But the event which left an indelible mark upon the people was the Roman

Many of the Roman legionaries settled on the land and married Dacian women, and when, in the closing days of the great republic, the com people took to emigrating, there commenced a slow, but steady, inflitration which eventually turned the Dacians into a Roman population speaking the vulgar Latin tongue. Thus today Rumania resembles a Latin islet in a Greek sea; the peasantry, outwardly Slav in appearance ment and bearing that is essentially Latin; the language is obviously of a Latin derivation, to the extent that a knowledge of modern Italian permits one to glean the gist of a Rumanian newspaper, but it is spoken with a definite Slav accent.

Today Greater Rumania is one of the most richly endowed countries in all Europe. Her fertile plains, watered by the Danube and its trib-utaries, must ultimately yield enough to feed the native population and once again provide a great surplus for export; the weath of her oil fields has scarcely yet been tapped; entire districts are covered with rich forests ripe for exploitation. Corn, oil and timber—many a land would rise to conomic prominence on these assets alone. Great Estates Wiped Out

Various abuses have crept in under the old system, but if a friendly door to foreign finance is opened, and, at the same time, the fiscal and other vexatious conditions imposed on export trade are removed, a bright future of commercial expansion and Should this come to pass. Rumania will have taken a great step toward the solution of her financial difficulties, for all she needs, in effect, is to realize some of her almost unlimited assets and turn her natural heritage into money.

The problems surrounding the development of the agricultural resources of the land are of a somewhat progress which impress the visitor to Athens and Belgrade are here lackdifferent nature and cannot be solved Athens and Beigrade are nere lack-ing. The standard of living is lower, and the cost of living conspicuously less. As usual, the black-coated workers and the professional classes are the hardest hit, but the people out of hand. In a word, Rumania is today reaping the untoward con-sequences inherent in the bold measure of agrarian reform introduced by the Bratianu Government. Since the war, the great estates which formerly as a whole are deprived of anything suggestive of luxury or extrav-agance and it is to their lasting credit that they are submitting to the sacrifices entailed with remarkproduced the grain exports have been practically wiped out and the fields have been expropriated and parceled out among the peasants. Thus, by a law which has admittedly become a able good will.

Rumania can hardly fail to weather her difficulties and reach political necessity, Rumania came into line with Serbia, Bulgaria and, weather her difficulties and reach the haven of peace and plenty, and the only question is why she has not already made more progress toward that goal of nationa' ambition. The responsibility for this would seem to lie partiy with the adverse circumstances which they have encountered. The Liberal Government, which had just completed four years of office, succeeded to an extent which is not fully acknowledged in setting the Rumanian financial house in order. The budget has been balanced and external debts have been funded. But this has been accomfunded. But this has been accomfunded. But this has been accomfunded. and prefer to store any surplus rather than pay the tax on exports. The consequence is that, instead of exporting grain in remunerative quantities as heretofore, Rumania is funded. But this has been accom-plished rather by draining the re-sources of the individual taxpayer obliged to import to meet her own obliged to import to meet her own requirements.

In drawing attention to the primitive status of the Rumanian peasant, it is only fair to note that he has been denied many of the benefits enjoyed by his neighbors. Even the old kingdom has only known real freedom for 50 years, and it is common knowledge that the population of the provinces formerly under Hungarian domination was held in a state of serfdom. Since the fiberation, very remarkable progress has been made, and the lively intellect of the people hustifies the assumption that they will rapidly rise to the riches of Rumania for Rumanian pockets, and while seeking the cooperation of foreign capital—be paid more than one visit to London in this connection—he would only accept it on a basis of financial and administrative inferfority. That policy failed. The foreign financier would not agree to pay the piper and let the netwee call the tune, and, since the necessary funds did not exist in the country, the net result was continued poverty in the midst of stupendous latent wealth.

foreign capital may co-operate in tensive educational propagands was Rumanian enterprise on more acceptable terms. A mere alteration of the statute will not, of course, alone suffice at this juncture.

The suffice at this juncture. peasants, hitherto content with the crude necessities of life and labor, are developing a liking for modern beds, tables and chairs; they are with one another for competing with one another for cossession of the best horses and the most ornate wagons; they are, in short, beginning to appreciate the purchasing power of money. Elements of Prosperity

All this, in its turn, is bringing about a gradual increase in the areaof land under cultivation, and while some time must elapse before the export of grain from Greater Ru-mania even reaches the figure at-tained by the old kingdom, the necestained by the old kingdom, the neces-sity for outside purchases should disappear within a comparatively brief period. Meanwhile, the authori-jies consider that the political and social advantages accruing from the creation of a race of peasant proprietors will amply compensate the state for any fiscal limitations suf-fered during the transformation. Despite her immediate difficulties, therefore, Rumania possesses all the elements of economic prosperity. How soon this can be achieved will depend largely upon wise co-opera-tion with foreign finance, the cessa-tion of internal political strife, the conclusion of satisfactory relations with Soviet Russia, and the education of the peasant population. The new Government is certainly animated by most admirable intentions, her business men appreciate the possibilities which lie before them, and it is almost impossible to imagine that foreign capitalists will neglect to investigate the opportunities which exist for remunerative investment and enterprise. Business investment and enterprise. Ruma-nia is assuredly "a land of promise."

Objection might be taken to this imputation, but it remains true that the middle class in Austria has been unorganized and has been the pawn of both capitalist and projectariat. The weakness of the Socialist policy here would seem to be that loving one's neighbor is not carried as far beyond the sharply defined border of the laboring class as might be the case. The Classic Meets the Gothic

The Renaissance period failed at first to affect the smaller buildings in France, to any great extent, but showed its influence more on public and ecclesiastical structures. The parish clergy, small landholders, and prosperous burghers adhered to the old standards, and continued to build as their fathers before them had built. The class influence was slow in making itself felt; but as soon as it became popular, showed itself in quaint and engaging guise. penetrating the Gothic shell, at times transforming it in fascinating ways while still holding to the influ-ence of the old. The appeal of such architecture comes from its pic-turesque qualities, and is seldom, if ever, based on proportion or other fundamentals from which rules or laws of design can be deduced. That portions of France were owned by English lords for several centuries, accounts for the similarity And there is a real meaning back of the beauty that envelops those old buildings. One may understand this when one realizes that the work of the old builders expresses a greater depth of character than is apparent in the present period. All Normandy is most picturesque and fascinating, particularly in its architecture. It is a small country and perhaps partly for that reason, expresses great charm and s.m.

But there is another side to the story which may be best exemplified by quoting an actual case.

The body was usually cast or wrought in one solid plece, with the nose, or spout for the wick to lie in, at one end and a short curved upright handle opposite. To this handle was often attached a short-linked chain with an iron spindle and hooked end, also a alender iron pick to free the wick when it became crusted with soot or carbon. The spindle was used either to hang up the lamp from the top of the chair in which the reader sai, or to fasten it in position by sticking the sharp end between stones of the swarms of small fish found in great abundance all along the coast, but the light was feeble, the wick constantly crusting over, while the odor of the burning fish oil was anything but agreeable.

Another very common form of illumination in those early days was what is known as "candlewood."

Pleces of the resinous pitch pine, so common along the wooded New England coast, were cut in size and stuck between the stones in improvised holders. They burned freely but with considerable amoke.

Upon the discovery, about 1630, of a deposit of bog fron some 10 miles from Boston, a primitive smelter was set up and manufacture comménced of iron utensils, including Betty lamps in this metal.

Later as ships brought supplies from England, tin was substituted for fron, since it is lighter, neater, and more easily manipulated. Some of the quaint Betty lamps were attached to stands and were even made adjustable so that the light could be moved up or down at the will of the reader.

A more elaborate process of bronzing is that employed in polychroming. Gold or silver powder is mixed with banana oil and the entire surface is covered with it, care being daken to cover every crevice in the casting. After it is dried, an oil paint of a rich color, thinned with turpentine, is rubbed into it. The crafts-woman will find that it will settle in theserevices of the casting. but she should remove it from the high spots with a pad. The design may then be touched up with enamels.

A candle sconce made in the shape of a shield with grape designs hanging from either side is most effective when a coat of bronzing is applied to the shield and the candle holder with an overcoating of green oil paint. The grape clusters should be enameled in the rich purple and green of the natural fruit and leaves.

The Essential in Art

Every man has some ability and gift toward seeing the essential qual-This does not mean that he is indifferent to or out of accord with shortest distance between any two points within it. And from such as such sympathy with it that he is willing to set his hand to the pixw pieces of experience, and to the discovery of what shall be covery of what shall be cover pieces of experience, and to the dis-covery of what shall be for him the essential quality of the wind at night, say, or the poetry of Shelley or Leopardi, the art of Duccio or Bot-ticelli, the character of a great city. of heroic figures in time, or cycles of thought.

An artist, however, is, by his very nature, distinguished from most men by the force that drives him toward an essential characteristic. The extent of this force is one of the measures of the artist in him. He approaches his material—the sculp-tor his living model or anatomy, the painter his landscape, the dramatist his men and events—and finds in it something that is his idea; he means to discover that element which for him will be the conscious being; he finds in his material that something; he finds that which will be for him permanent and ideal, and will re main for him when the material itself has faded. . . . He is driven on . . . by his desire to free his idea from the confusions and accidents of the original material and to leave it essential.

The next measure of the artist's ability, however, will be the extent to which he can carry into the terms of his art the essential that he desires to express. Any one, almost knows how easy it is at the start to get the outside. . . . With a little talent and less instruction or practice one may paint a pleasing landscape, trees, golden sky, birds flying, or make a pretty drawing. In music a beginner with a good ear and re-laxed fingers can set up a remarkable effect. And a young sculptor can catch the outside of a head, find a nose and eyes and surface planes that make a highly plausible result. But only slowly does the young painter find his essential idea and the technique inevitable to it; only slowly the musician discovers unescapable pattern of the mustgins to be promising when he is un-willing to go farther than the point where he can actually carry into line, into solidity of form, the head the actor, scene, and incident-to the material—men, places, and events—makes easily possible a certain semblance of an art. The separate and individual nature of each art, and of any school or period in art, best appears through the essential idea or quality expressed in any piece of it. All arts have at bottom the same function.

The perception in a painting and in a statue, for instance, of such a like essential idea will make clear the difference between the expression of it pictorially or sculpturally, and so will in turn make clear, also, how far or near to some particular experience.

The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, writes in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 180), "When man is governed by God, the ever-present Mind who understands all things, man knows that with God all things are possible." It is not, then, a matter of asking God to carry out our plans, but of knowing that God's plan never fails, and that He is the only one who should outline. Jesus had not a shadow of doubt as to the ability of God, divine intelligence, to guide him; not a doubt about the spiritual nature of the help he was to receive from God, or the love which animated it. He knew and acknowledged but one parent, God, and, refusing even the title of "Good Master," turned all praise wars from his own personality to the faith, that is, based on spiritual self do nothing." governed, guided, sustained, and pro-ent, God, and, refusing even the title of "Good Master," turned all praise away from his own personality to understanding: for a consciousness God, the only good.

It is easy to refuse to take blame when things go wrong; and how easy it is to take the praise to ourselves when they go right! "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory," declared Jesus, who humbly said of himself, "I can of mine own self do nothing."

understanding; for a consciousness of man's unity with his Father; for a realization of the power of divine law, which holds man forever in his rightful place; for an understanding of the necessity and the joy of letting go of self-will and saying, "Thy will be done," knowing that God's will works out nothing but good for us all if for a letting second proposition. Christ Jesus acknowledged and dechrist Jesus acknowledged and de-clared the existence of spiritual man, the man of God's creating, made in the mage and likeness of Spirit, the the image and likeness of Spirit, the man who dwells forever in the divine Mind which created him, perfectly mind, and now a construct and and now derstand God which gave him dominion over every problem that con-fronted him, and which made aim successful.

Jesus' teaching was for centuries smothered under creed, dogma, and ceremony; but with the advent of Christian Science, as given to the orld through the writings of Mrs. Eddy, its significance is again becoming apparent. More and more, and in ever increasing numbers, peo-ple are turning from their sinful and sickly thoughts to realize with joy the freedom, dominion, and health which come from walking with God understandingly. Truly, "with God all things are possible.

Farrell and Sarazen Lead Senior Title on Opening Day in Canadian Open at Montreal

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 6 (Special)
—Lee H. Deigel who, by winning the Canadian open golf championship in 1924 and 1925 equaled the record of Douglas Edgar of Atlanta, Ga., of two successive championships, faces a four-stroke deficit after the end of the first 18 holes of the 1926 tournament which were played at the Royal Montreal Club yesterday. Eugene Sarazen and John Farrell leading the field of 140 starters with 69s, four strokes under par, while Deigel is tied for sixth place with four others with a par 73.

Two strokes behind the leaders is MacDonald Smith while L. Cunningham of Kingston, the only Canadian who qualified for the recent United States open, is tied with Thomas D. Armour of Washington for fourth place. The other four grouped with Deigel are Andrew Kay of Lambton, James Kinnear of Redford, Mich. Thomas L. Kerrigan of Siwanoy, twice runnerup for the Canadian open title and Wilfred Reid of Detroit.

The field today, while not equaling the record as far as quantity is concerned, is undoubtedly the strongest that has ever sought the championship, as the 140-odd competitors who teed off included the greater majority of the leading professionals on the American continent. The quality and the competition was reduced by the inability of William Mehlhorn to start, but outside of Waiter C. Hagen, A. L. Watrous and Robert T. As a result of their victory, the Yankees regained their margin of 10 games over

COLLINS IS BRILLIANT

DETROIT, Aug. 6—Detroit's victory over Washington, here yesterday, 6 to 4, enabled the Tigers to move out of a triple tile for fourth place into a tie with Chicago for possession of it, only one-half a game behind Philadelphia in third place. Johns started the game for Detroit and, after letting the Tigers have two hits and two runs, he was taken out, and Collins, who took his place, allowed only one hit during the remainder of the game. Johnson pitched for Washington, and it was his home run in the second inning that helped Washington gain a two-run lead. The score:

PITTSBURGH WINS AGAIN

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 6 — The Pittsburgh champions made it two out of three in the series against the Boston Braves, yesterday, by taking the third game, 4 to 3, despite the fact that they were held to only six 'hits by Goldsmith and Mogridge, while the winners made eight. Errors by Goldsmith and High proved costly. The former Eastern League pitcher, was invincible up to the fifth inning and it looked like another easy victory for the Braves with a three-run lead. But in the fifth, two singles and a double and Goldsmith's poor throw to second which would undoubtedly have stopped Pittsburgh without a run if it had been good, caused all the scoring in that inning. Pittsburgh by virtue of its victory is now two games ahead of Ciucinnati which lost to New York. The the outstanding favorite to repeat a triumph registered in this event at the 1925 championships, at Detroit.

The mediey event called for the use of three different strokes, 100-metereach, breaststroke, backstroke and freestyle. Miss Lambert, a past master at backstroke swimming, is also adept at the breaststroke and freestyle method, but the lead which she can easily build up in the backstroke should give her a distinct advantage. Opposing Miss Lambert is a strong field including two teammates, Miss Elaine Delaney and Miss Doris O'Mara, in addition to Miss Susan Laird of the Carnegie Library team of Homestead, Pa.

Miss Lambert and Miss Martha Norelius of the New York club were victors in the two events yesterday, the former scoring a triumph in the 220-yard backstroke while the latter outdistanced the field in the 400-yard freestyle race.

CATTLE AND LAMB PRICES WORK HIGHER

Fat Steers Wanted at Chicago, but Westerns Off -Hogs Are Lower

CHICAGO, Aug. 6 (Special)—Under the influence of supply abridgments, fat cattle values worked higher during the week on the Chicago live stock market. Weighty steers, pounded so hard a week earlier, gained slowest hard a week earlier, gained slowest and least. Hog values continued downward as the average weight increased. Fat lambs advanced, and aged sheep worked higher.

Fat lambs advanced, and aged sneep worked higher.

Good to choice heavy steers gained 15@25c, according to a report by the Bureau of Agricultural Economies. United States Department of Agriculture. Comparable grades of medium weight steers showed a 25@35c upturn, and all grades of yearlings gained 25@50c.

Western Steers Lower

Western Steers Lower

Western Steers Lower

Although weighty short fed and grassy steers were in excess of demand, and the killing end of the western grass run, which was the largest of the season so far, tested out the values on Montana grass steers and found the demand very narrow.

The result was that prices closed weak to 25 cents lower, most westerns going to killers at $6.60 to $7.25. The entire steer trade continued on a weight basis, yearlings outselling heavies by 75 cents to $1 on a grade for grade basis.

Long yearlings reached $10.60 and sales were numerous at $10.50, but by the end of the week choice 1202 steers had only climbed to $10, with 1589-pound average at $9.90. From $8.50 downward it was a dult trade on steers with weight, plain Montanas selling as low as $6 to killers. All yearlings and practically everything in the she-stock line went like hot cakes.

The country continued to ignore meaty feeders which sold relatively low as compared with light stockers which were in active demand at $6 to $7. Weighty bulls advanced 25 cents and a meager crop of calves gained $1, choice kinds closing at $14.50.

Hogs Generally Off

Hogs Generally Off

Narrow shipping demand weakened the small supply of light hogs and the closing top at $13.30 was the lowest in months. Hogs scaling 200 pounds sold off at $13.25, with 250-pound butchers stopping at $12.50 and 300-pound kinds at $12.

stopping at $12.50 and 300-poulm kinus at $12.

Most packer sows turned late at $9.65 to $10.10, it being a 25 to 35-cent decline on all porcine prices. The average daily weights locally ranged from 272 to 290 pounds, standing considerably higher than a month earlier.

Advancing 25 to 50 cents western fat lambs were on a $12.25 to $14.50 basis as the week closed, the top standing at $14.15. Natlives sold upward to $14.35, it being a $13.75 to $14.15 trade on natives, however, with bucky natives around $12 and culls at $10 to $10.50.

Tidy killing ewes reached $7.75. Of Interest to Travelers

Among the Railroads

By FRANKLIN SNOW

THE Van Sweringen merger is again, assuming interesting proportions, the roads affected being, in addition to the already enlarged Nickel Plate system, the Erle, the Pere Marquette and the Chesapeake & Ohlo.

Opposition to the terms now offered by the Van Sweringen brothers to the stockholders of the other roads is indicated by the formation of new protective committees to protect the rights of the minority stockholders. In the case of the Chesapeake & Ohlo, this committee is particularly active. The claim is made by this group that the C. & O. will earn $25 a share this year, while under the terms of the Van Sweringen offer, stockholders will be offered an exchange of stock which will give them only a 6 per-cent dividend on the new stock. Chesapeake & Ohlo is now paying 8 per cent, plus 4 per cent extra dividend.

Opinions on the merits of the entire merger have always differed. Financial men in New York approve the consolidation, it being generally the custom among this group to desire to see a large company become larger. Railroad men, having less interest in the financial end and viewing the project solely from its business aspects, fait to see where the component parts of the system, particularly the Chesapeake & Ohlo, have anything in common either from an operating or a traffic standpoint, with the other roads.

Such tickets could not be used by the straight commercial travel, which the roads would get anyay, at full and the Pere Marquette, being in the same general territory afford a more logical merger, but the addition of the C. & O. is not favorably regarded by many analysts of the proposal. In rejecting the plan, originally, the Interstate Commerce Commission confined its objections to the inequitable treatment offered to stockholders.

New Pennsylvania Engines

The Pennsylvania Railroad has contracted with the American Brown Roverl Corporation for seven of the South Composal of the Corporation for seven of the South Composal of the South Commerce Commission confined travel—rates at substantial reductions, as the substan

A review of the list of railroads which carry The Christian Science Monitor in the club or observation cars of their trains is given below in response to requests for such information by travelers who wish to use railroads thus showing their concurrence in the cause of clean journalism. The names of trains is too extensive to mention here but the principal trains of each of the roads enumerated are in this category, most of them being suppiled with copies of the paper in both directions of their runs.

Railroad Office Buildings

The "own your own home" slogan has been adopted by a number of railroads fo recent years in providing modern new office buildings at the point where the headquarters are located i.argest of these probably is the Pennsylvania's new building at were $180,000, compared with $250,000 the preceding year.

GERMAN LIGNITE HOLDS ITS OWN

Syndicate Reports Expensive Modern Plant Kept Fully Employed

BERLIN (Special Correspondence) -When at the close of the occupation of the Ruhr the keen competition between pit coal and lignite was again placed upon a purely economic basis, some apprehension was at first felt in the lignite industry lest lignite should not be able to hold its own.

Despite the period of extraordinary depression through which German industry has been passing, and under which it is still laboring, the Lignite Syndicate, which has its headquar-ters in Cologne, is able in the reporbusiness, a shortage which also accounts for the increasing lack of or

Recent statements made pertaining to the use of Pullman equipment by all railroads in the United States overlooked the fact that some roads still operate their own parlor cars. The Erie uses its own parlor cars on several trains, the Delaware & Hudson does, or did until recently, and other roads in addition to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul use their own equipment of this type on certain trains.

Modern research has shown that lignite, provided it has never been exposed to great pressure or to high temperatures as is the case with the Moscow fields, is the richer in tar the older it is, and that the most remunerative method of treating such bituminous lignite is dry distillation. Analysis of the lignite coal found in the Moscow district shows that the amount of tar present in no case talls below 4 per cent, while in some it rises as high as 50 per cent. In Germany lignite with as much as 3 per cent of tar is resarded as a great rarity. Moscow geologists reckoned that the average tar content in the Moscow brown coal will be about 19 per cent, as compared with an average of from 3 to 4 per

SCOTLAND SEES LIQUOR DECLINE

Drunkenness in Villages Disappearing — Temperance Act Justifies Itself

EDINBURGH (Special Correspondence)-The Temperance (Scot land) Act has more than justified itself in its results, according to a statement made by the Rev. James Muir who appeared before the as-sembly of the United Free Church of Scotland recently and moved the adoption of the report of the committee on temperance.

Mr. Muir said that though there were signs that great dividends were coming to those who carried on the trade, there were also signs that the drink trade was on the decline. It was reported that drunkenness in certain villages had entirely disap-peared. The distilleries were drying up. It was the duty of the church to get temperance organizations in organizations in congregation ered it a scandal that the church which had the power to eliminate the drink traffic did not do it.

The Rev. Dr. Lauchlan McLean Watt, Glasgow, said he believed that they were on the verge of big things for Scotland, and that sooner than for Scotland, and that sooner than they knew they would find that the big pull together which union would give them, would be no revolution, but an answered prayer for the ad-vance of the Kingdom of God. No church could be a soul-saving church that was not a sober church. The biggest work they had to do in Scotland today was to see that whatever else the public house was, it should not have added attractions so that their women and children should be drawn in. No decent woman wanted Lord Salvesen's improved public house, nor wanted her child to grow accustomed to it.

In its report, the temperance committee states that the enemies of temperance never rest from their efforts to defend their traffic and to extend its bad influence among the people. They know that its time is short. Their policy, therefore, is to please and flatter the people by cheap beer and improved public houses. They would only confer these benefits, however, if the taxatiton on beer were reduced, and security was guaranteed from irksome public con-

The Church must persevere in de-nouncing this evil traffic under every guise. The 1913 Act might not be all that was wanted, but a vote for "No that was wanted, but a vote for "No License" might mean very much, and it was the best they could do just now. The assembly's temperance committee rejoiced, therefore, in 'he evidence they had received that there was less carping criticism of the act than heretofore. At the same time, they had reason to lament that so many church members were deaf to their duty. Another poll had been taken in 1925 and again they had to report that the church members could have carried "No License" in most of the parishes that had a poll and it was net done. What availed assembly recommendation or public resolution in faultless terms if votes were withheld?

The Rev. James G. Lunn, vice-convener of the committee, referring to recent results at the poll, said that they did not regard those results as the symptoms of defeat, but rather; s a challenge to continue the task which they had set themselves.

There has been a great deal of discussion of late, especially in German and Italian circles,

The Colonial Problem

about the need of those countries for colonial expansion. In each case the plea is fundamentally the same. In both the population is rapidly expanding. In both, also, there is a shortage of room and of raw materials. Both are becoming rapidly industrialized. Both, therefore, require an extension of territory abroad on which to settle their surplus people, in which to produce the raw materials needed and to provide a market in which to sell their manufactured products. And the case which is being made for colonial expansion in Germany and Italy today will be made in many other countries before very long, for the problem about which they are talking is one which has troubled all ages, and which is once more confronting the modern world.

The solution, however, is not so easy as might appear. In the first place, where are the colonies fit for white settlement to be found? There is not a single area in the temperate zone of the New World or of Africa or Asia which is not already occupied by an independent selfgoverning people. No one would suggest that self-governing nationalities should be extinguished to make room for an extension of German or Italian sovereignty. That would be to set back the whole tide of development of the last century, which has been marked by an increasing independence of all colonial peoples from the control of their motherlands. Great Britain today, for instance, exercises no sort of power in the internal affairs of Canada or

In the second place, experience so far shows that white settlement is, practically speaking, impossible in tropical areas. On the one hand the means has not yet been discovered whereby white people can maintain their progressive generation after generation, in the tropics. On the other hand, the tropics are already peopled by native races who do all the rougher manual labor at a very cheap rate, and thereby drive the white man out of all unskilled employment and prevent the growth of a homogeneous white community. The theory, therefore, that colonies in the old-fashioned sense of the word are possible in the modern world seems to be illusory. If Europe is unable to provide work and employment for all its peoples at home, the only alternative would seem to be that its surplus population should emigrate to become citizens of the United States or the Argentine, South Africa or Australia, or of some other self-governing state.

What of the other aspect of the problem, the necessity for tropical colonies, not for white settlement, but for the production of raw ma-terials needed by home industries and to serve as markets for their home manufactures? This is a much more practicable proposition, though there are considerable practical limitations in the way of its realization. On the one hand the amount of territory which could be transferred is necessarily quite inadequate compared with the economic needs of a great industrial power. No colony can produce more than a tiny fraction of the raw materials which manufacturing nations like Germany and Italy require, or absorb more t' a tiny fraction of their manu-What really matters to both, factured prod as to all other ...ations, is not so much colonies as access to raw materials everywhere, and with other industrial powers. On the other hand, it is not at all an easy matter to transfer colonies from one administration to another except during a convulsion like a war. It may have been a mistake for the Allies to have deprived Germany of all her overseas possessions under the Treaty of Versailles. The strongest argument for not doing so was the undesirability, in the interests of the native peoples, of pulling up the roots of an established administration and starting a new one afresh. But that does not make it any easier to repeat the process and to pull down the French or British or Australian governments which have been functioning for six years or more and replace them by Italian or German governments. The obstacles in the way of handing peoples about, unless there is genuine misgovernment, as there is said to be in some parts of the Portuguese possessions, are very

It is evident, therefore, that the difficulties in the way of satisfying the demand of European powers for colonies are extremely formidable. It would also appear that apart from questions of amour propre, which are undoubt-edly serious, the point of substance is not the question of ownership of territory, but that of security of access to raw materials and markets, in other words the universal "open door." None the less the colonial question has unquestionably got to be faced, and the sooner the leaders of the nations discuss it among themselves the better, with a view to realizing what is possible and what is not. The entry of Germany into the League of Nations and its presence on the Mandates Commission is likely to bring the whole subject up for discussion very

One who seeks to trace to its inception the controversy which has led at last to a critical impasse in the affairs of

Free Schools in Mexico

Mexico discovers, first of all, the growth of the public school system under the direction of the present administrative heads. From time to time within the last two or three years news dispatches and special articles contributed by those in close touch with the situation have indicated the purpose of the federal officials in charge of education to correct what they believe has been a serious and undesirable social condition among the people of what are regarded the lower classes by offering to them the opportunity to gain the rudiments of an education. The method adopted and approved by President Calles has been the establishment of free public schools similar to those which have existed in the United States, and in the colonies, for several hundred years.

The effects of this innovation are said to be already noticeable. It requires no prophetic vision to discover, in prospect, a still greater change in the thought of the Mexican people as the benefits of education become more and more widespread. From subjugation and mental slavery they will emerge, one day, into the light of reason and understanding. To the credit of those in authority in Mexico, be it said that they desire and intend, by every means which they believe necessary and proper, to hasten that day of deliverance. It should not be wondered at, this being the case, that those who, for any reason or because of any prejudice, oppose this reform, are equally active and just as determined in their effort to check or prevent its spread. Privilege that claims to be vested and established is stubborn and often resourceful in opposing its own dislodgment. If it is deep rooted and protected by custom, or if for sentimental reasons it enjoys special consideration, it makes the way hard for even progressive

The pendulum, swinging to its extreme in Mexico, seems to have caused deep concern and great social unrest. This is because two resourceful and powerful factions, if they may be so termed, have clashed. But the situation is not necessarily a desperate one. The important consideration to be kept in view is not whether some merely national prerogative is to be established as superior and controlling, not whether some heretofore protected privilege is longer to be safeguarded, but whether individual rights are established and the whole machinery of government is adapted and consecrated to their

There will come, naturally and as a matter of course, it is hoped, a proper readjustment of conditions in Mexico. But this can come only when there is manifested a willingness on the part of those now opposed to each other to make those proper and necessary concessions which will insure social and political peace. History affords the hopeful assurance that the result of the present upheaval will be social progress. It is by revolutions of this kind that ambitious peoples, since the dawn of history, have advanced. Mexico has remained unprogressive for centuries, comparing it with the social and educational development which has taken place elsewhere. The defenders of systems which claim no distinction except that gained by length of years seem to have little to offer to those whom they seek to persuade. or force, to destroy in its infancy the system of free public schools which has been estab-

Men and women in Chicago who possess both courage and foresight sufficient to approach and

An Investment in Intangibles seek to solve the housing problem in that city have at least made . it plain that the opportunity is presented for those willing to devote their surplus capital to a long-term investment to begin now by provid-ing respectable living quarters for the thousands who are forced to dwell in discomfort and squalor. The emphatic demand for relief made by those who have proposed the plan to the city's housing commission might indicate that conditions in Chicago are somewhat worse than in other large centers, but this is so, probably, because of the tremendously rapid growth in population and the inability, under the system of segregation which is more or less strictly adhered to, of those who must dwell in restricted or limited areas to obtain sanitary quarters.

So it comes about that the appeal is, not to philanthropists simply, but to all patriotic citi-zens who are willing to invest, to take definite steps to insure homes to those who are supplying the man-power to carry on the city's induspromises are held out. Such investments, it is quite certain, will not return fabulous dividends in cash. The properties which it is sought to improve may not appreciate in value as rapidly as those more favorably situated, and it is realized in advance that the returns from monthly or annual rentals will be somewhat below those from higher class properties. But there are other and perhaps equally important aspects of the matter which must be considered. In the view of those who have manifested an interest in the situation, the welfare of a large portion of the population of the city, upon whose existence the industrial prosperity of all the people largely depends, offers, in the case of its housing, a sound opportunity for permanent investment.

Natural conditions existing in Chicago would seem to make the solution of the housing problem comparatively easy. Unlike some of the other larger American cities, its restricted areas are small in comparison to the areas open for the use of those able to pay moderate rentals. The chief hindrance to the carrying out of the proposed plan is the assured higher profit which capital invested in buildings of a better class will earn. No secret is made of the fact that those who devote their money to this undertaking must do so with the understanding that their reward, at least in part, will be the realization that they have aided in a worthy humanitarian undertaking.

It is doubtful if the plight of the underprivileged persons who work for day wages in the larger cities and who would not be permitted under any circumstances to reside in exclusive sections is appreciated by the average pros-perous citizen. Those who have taken pains to inform themselves need not be told that the environment in which the families of these people are compelled to remain is not one in which future American citizens and electors should be reared. The influences are contaminating and degrading. Who, it may be asked. is responsible if, from this melting pot, come those who regard their debt and duty to society lightly? Some will survive the ordeal and come forth unscathed and perhaps unembittered by their experience. But others will be unable to escape the baneful influences, no matter how much they may detest them. The mark, once placed, is hard to erase.

It can hardly be said that the Pan-Asiatic conference at Nagasaki has had an auspicious

The Pan-Asiatic Conference at Nagasaki opening. Originally planned with a view to the formation of a cultural organization along the lines of the Pan-American Union, which would menace nobody, the conference bade fair to win support from those who desire to see removed some of the barriers that separate the races and peoples of Asia. But the opening session revealed not only obstructionist tactics by some of the delegates, but also an anti-Western feeling which found vent in the speeches of Japanese and Chinese, who predominated at the gathering. In so far as the opinions expressed were unofficial and academic, they may be discounted, yet they served to check the move toward better things which some of the members hoped to promote.

The conference had great possibilities. It was representative of a varying degree of opinion in Japan and China, India, Korea and the Philippines. It was sponsored by the Pan-Asiatic Society of Japan, an organization which was brought into existence two years ago as a result of the passage of the American Immigration Law and Japanese resentment at its exclusion provisions. This organization opened a branch in Shanghai, and an effort was made to enlist support in practically every Asiatic nation. It was intended to hold the first conference in Shanghai, but the objections of the Indian delegates overruled this proposal and it was decided that the seat of the conference should be in southern Japan.

Even before it opened, the conference faced a number of difficulties, and it was cautioned against adopting an attitude that might prove embarrassing to the Government. The Government of Japan is pursuing a policy of friendly co-operation with the United States and Great Britain, and it is determined to combat anything that tends to interfere with that friendship. Likewise the progress of China, of India and of the Philippines is based on Western ideals, a factor that radical opinion is apt to

There is a wide field in which a conference of this nature might find considerable scope. And if it confined its efforts to establishing an interchange of scholars among Asiatics and fostering friendship and understanding among the various races, as it at first set out to do, it would perform a service of immense value. There are numerous differences of race, caste and lan-guage dividing the peoples of the East, and to the dissipation of these differences the conference might well devote its sincere endeavors.

Presumably representing the views of the British Government, of which he is a conspicuous member, Sir William Joynson-Hicks has announced the policy that should be adopted if the coal mine operators decide to resume work without coming to an agreement with the mine workers' union. In that event, he recently declared: "If any man chooses to go back to his work as soon as the mines are open, it will be our duty to give him the inalienable right to work if he so desires."

In thus setting forth clearly the fundamental that men willing to work should be protected in their right to labor, the spokesman for the British Government has enunciated an important truth. It is, however, only a half truth, unless along with it there is given the further assurance that the opportunity to work will be afforded, in so far as the powers of government can be extended for that purpose. It is mani-festly reasonable and just that men willing to dig coal should be protected against intimidation or violence.

There remains the other, and equally important, truth that since men have the "inalie right to work" governments should be equally zealous in protecting that right when it is denied by conditions other than those created by a strike.

Take the case of an idle miner seeking employment, who travels from one colliery to another, but finds no one to hire him. Suppose that he decides to co-operate with some of his fellows and dig coal. There are great seams of coal underground awaiting the miner's pick, but these deposits are all "owned," and cannot be touched without the consent of the "owners." To tell a man that he has the right to work, while conditions deprive him of the opportunity to labor, would appear to be similar to putting him overboard in midocean, and telling him that he has the right to walk ashore. The inalienable right to work must imply conditions under which employment of some kind, not necessarily at coal mining, is open to all. To provide these conditions is the prime requisite for the solution of what is popularly termed 'the labor problem."

Editorial Notes

It has long been proverbial that too many cooks spoil the broth, but now, apparently according to Mrs. L. H. Reilly, referred to as a leading member of the Buckingham (Eng.) Women's Institute, the Englishwoman is the culprit. At least, Mrs. Reilly is quoted as being of the opinion that the average Englishwoman is the worst cook in the world. Here is part of the indictment leveled by Mrs. Reilly against her compatriots:

She has no idea of the proper use of sauces, and sho will not use up bones and scraps.

She throws to the dog a bone from which a French-woman would make a most delicious and nourishing soup.

She throws to the chickens the scraps which the Frenchwoman would turn into a splendid stock, and gives to her children bread and dripping, where a Frenchwoman would present them with a tempting little disamade from odd pieces.

Maybe all this is true, but just the same to an Englishman, no matter how long he may have been away from his native land, the memory of the roast beef, and the legs of mutton, and the puddings is something that remains most extraordinarily vivid.

Canada From a Car Window

(Second Article)

F THERE is to be any serious clash between the United | States and Canada, it will proceed from a malign combination which has produced more than one quarrel, namely, whisky and water.

Chicago's persistent drainage of the Great Lakes to flush its sanitary system is causing a degree of irritation in Canada's eastern watershed that ought not to be left in Canada's eastern watershed that ought not to be left unallayed. Canadian watering places on the Lakes find their boathouses left without water, their piers ending where no boat can possibly float, their bathing beaches high and dry. Shipping interests complain of harbors closed and channels blocked. The average Canadian, commenting on the situation, is particularly cynical about the fact that while the United States courts have decided against Chicago, that city continues its aqueous pilferings and gives no sign of making any arrangements for disposing of its sewage other than by persistence in its present course.

The situation is not a just or equable one, and it reflects little credit on the United States Government that it should have been permitted to reach its present acute stage. In the International Joint Commission there exists an arbitral body which has long functioned to the satisfaction of both peoples. Why should not the question of the Chicago Drainage Canal, and the rights of states and provinces bordering on the Great Lakes, be submitted to it?

As a matter of fact, the Chicago device of reversing the current of a river and draining Lake Michigan in order to dispose of its sewage was unscientific and wasteful in its inception. I recall with some gratification that when it was up for adoption the Chicago newspaper on which I was an editorial writer opposed it strongly. Many of the predictions of evil then made in the Chicago Times are now being fulfilled. But enormous political and financial interests are now involved in the drainage district and canal, and they will not be dislodged without a struggle

As for whisky, it bids fair to make more trouble than this disputed water. The businesslike methods which led the bootleggers engaged in smuggling Canadian liquor into the United States, to make their return trips profitable by smuggling American goods into Canada, caused the fall of a Dominion Government just before I reached Ottawa. At that it would seem that Canada had the better of the explance. But even before it was shown fall of a Dominion Government just before I reached Ottawa. At that it would seem that Canada had the better of the exchange. But even before it was shown that the Canada protective tariff was being undermined by the activities of the whisky runners, right-thinking Canadians were beginning to resent the complicity of lesser government officials in so disreputable a trade as smuggling whisky across the boundary of a friendly nation. The vile business could never have reached the proportions it did without official connivance, and the extent of that connivance was made only too clear in the investigation into the customs scandals which resulted m the governmental débâcle at the beginning of July.

It was curious to find all through Canada that temperance people were as little satisfied with the much-vaunted Canadian liquor laws as American wets are with prohibition. For that matter, the Canadian wets are not satisfied, either. Where "hard liquor" is denied them, bootlegging is as common as in the United States. Where liquops are sold by the Government only for consumption at home, speculative individuals purchase supplies at government stores and dispense them by the glass in "blind pigs." Ontario, after voting for the sale of 4.4 per cent beer as a moderate measure, now finds the wets demanding a higher percentage of alcohol, and persistently evading the law prohibiting manufacture for domestic use and sale of distilled liquors. The Monros has gone at length into the operations of the Canadian liquor law in all the provinces, and its authoritative articles have been read from Quebee to Vancouver.

There is so much of stark individualism in the average

There is so much of stark individualism in the average Canadian that the casual visitor is surprised at the amount of collectivism apparent, either in the form of co-operation effort as among the farmers of Alberta, the municipal ownership of public utilities in force in half a dozen of the chief cities, or that great and seemingly successful essay in public ownership and management, the Canadian National Railways.

National Railways.

Toronto owns and operates her own street railways. A seven-cent fare for single tickets is reduced to six cents by the purchase of fifty-ride booklets. The rolling stock is of the best—New York, Chicago or Boston strapholders would be apt to class the cars as palatial. In 1925 the net revenue of the roads amounted to nearly $4,000,000. Instead of grumbling at their street car service, as is customary when roads are privately owned and operated, the Torontonians were inclined to boast of its excellence. It is their own and they don't often let slip a chance to boost their own property.

to boost their own property. to boost their own property.

This inclination is still more apparent when one talks to a Canadian about the Canadian National Railways.

This remarkable aggregation of 22,000 miles of railway, with some sixty lake and ocean vessels, 102,000 miles of telegraph, five great hotels, and a dozen or so of summer hotels and lodges, constitutes the greatest adventure in public ownership known to the world. I use the world "adventure" purposely, for the Dominion did not embark upon this enterprise voluntarily or merely as an investupon this enterprise voluntarily or merely as an invest-ment. Confronted by the certain bankruptcy of a great group of railroads, with the inevitable interruption and even abandonment of much of the service which they had been rendering, the people of the Dominion determined to take the ownership and direction of the roads into their own hands. Sir Henry Thornton, an Indiana man, and once a famous football player at the University of Pennsylvania, who was called to England during the war to handle the railroads there for the Government, was summoned to grapple with the situation. He has done it in a way to awaken general admiration. A few months ago the Hon. Charles A. Dunning, Minister of Railways and Canals, said of the reform in the finances of the roads:
"It is four years since the Canadian National Railways showed an operating deficit. In 1920 the deficit was $34,000,000. In 1925 there was a surplus of $32,000,000. The extreme swing from the deficit of 1920 to the surplus of 1925 is $66,000,000, or over $11,000,000 a year."

I spent fully three weeks on the trains, in the hotels and on a ship of this system operated by government authority. If I were asked in what respect it seemed to differ from the ordinary railroad under private control, I should say in the loyalty of its employees to the management, and their eagerness to be of service to passengers. The least important conductor seemed as proud of Sir Henry's success in getting rid of the operating deficit as could be the banker who handled the road's finances. And when one of the two dining cars on a transcontinental train crowded with tourists was put out of action the manner in which the dining car conductor utilized his curtailed rewhich the dining car conductor utilized his curtailed resources to serve a hungry throng was a marvel of tact and energy. He seemed to feel that the reputation of a road owned by the people depended on his ability to keep hungry people good-humored, and he succeeded.

But the real problem of the Canadian railroads is not to be permanently solved by management—either governmental or private. What is needed is population along these strips of steel that bind the Dominion together. As one rides day after day through fire-scarred woods and unsettled day after day through fire-scarred woods and unsettled plains, both ready for the productive efforts of the husbandman, one wonders that the tides of immigration checked at the borders of the United States have not turned northward. And particularly does it seem inexplicable that out of the hundreds of thousands of uneraployed in England, denied there access to the land, there is not a great migration to the broad and fallow acres of Canada, where people are needed and unemployment is unknown.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in London

NEITHER the general strike nor the coal stoppage has prevented a remarkable rise in the average values of British investment securities. This is shown by semiofficial banking figures now available for the six months, Dec. 17 to June 18, past. The last part of this period included the whole of the general strike and six weeks of the coal tieup. Nevertheless, the aggregate value of 365 representative stocks was materially higher at the end than at the beginning. The chief fixed interest securities appreciated by £56,000,000, and the variable dividend securities by nearly £20,000,000. Various explanations are given of these facts. The most probable would seem to be that labor trouble had been far more than fully discounted in advance. When it came therefore, serious as it proved, it was not nearly as bad as had been expected.

The metamorphosis of a large portion of London's population from householders to flat dwellers proceeds apace. Who, twenty years ago, could have foreseen the palatial blocks of flats which have sprung up on the site of the old Devonshire House in Piccadilly? And poorer districts than Piccadilly are snapping up chances when factory or warehouse sites fall vacant. In Bermondsey a workhouse was soon turned into thirty-eight flats, and a leather warehouse is likely to undergo a similar conversion. Bermondsey has for long been well to the fore in town planning and utilizing odd vacant spaces for flower gardens and shrub planting.

The country postman is to have a motorcycle. Ever since letters have been sent by mail the figure of the rural postman has been a familiar sight in country districts. Often covering many miles daily, year in and year out, in all sorts of weather, he, and sometimes she, has been a link between scattered cottages and farms and the country village and town. But now the Postmaster-General has announced that the experiment is to be tried of providing the country postmen with "slow" motorcycles. Some of the younger ones will smile at that word "slow," but the occupants of the houses which lie in isolated spots will welcome the increased speed with which their letters and parcels will be delivered, and kindly hearts will no longer be wrung by the sight of the lonely figure trudging along on a hot summer's day or in winter storm to deliver His Majesty's mail. The utmost he should want in the future might be help with a puncture or a little petrol to see him to his journey's end.

Twenty girls trying to put twenty hats on one peg at once were seen in the House of Commons after one of the big United States liners landed its passengers here. The peg had been marked for the use of the Prince of Wales, and the girls were from a party of 500 light-hearted American students who have come to see the sights and to improve their studies. They are visiting all parts of Britain. Some of them are booked to attend summer lecture courses at Oxford and other universities.

Following its annual custom for 294 years, the Worshipful Company of Gardeners has presented the Lord Mayor of London with a gorgeous basket of flowers, herbs and vegetables, "in grateful remembrance of the Recorder's warrant of 1632." The basket was of gilt and its contents comprised roses, stocks, carnations, sweet peas.

er's warrant of 1632." The basket was of gilt and its contents comprised roses, stocks, carnations, sweet peas, Sweet Sultans, cucumbers, beans, carrots, turnips, marrows, tomatoes, peas, peaches, raspberries, cherries, red and black currants, apples and mixed herbs. Col. Sir John Young, in making the presentation to the Lord Mayor (Sir William Pryke), said that the company was ever grateful for the warrant which protected them in their lawful vocation of supplying fruit and vegetables in the city and for six miles around. King James I of Scotland granted the original warrant. Sir John stated that three past masters of the company had been Lord Mayors and predecessors of Sir William. The latter, in replying, referred to the magnificence of the gift and commended the company's work in promoting the culture of beautiful flowers and good vegetables.

A hitherto unknown perfect copy of the first edition of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress." 1678, has been discovered and is to be sold at Sothebys in London. Only four other perfect copies of the work are known to be in existence, three being in public libraries—the British Museum, the John Rylands Library, Manchester, and the Huntington Library in California. The fourth belongs to Sir George Holiford and has been in his family for generations. Until a few years ago, it was supposed to be the only perfect copy in existence. The one about to be sold is the property of R. C. Warner of Lombard Street. So extremely popular was the book that nearly all the copies of the first edition were read until they were worn out. There are also about five imperfect copies in existence, of which one, lacking eight leaves, sold in 1922 for £2010.

"Democracy Is Still on Trial"

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitors:

I should be glad if you would grant me space for the following quotation from William James:

Democracy is still upon trial. The civic genius of our people is its only bulwark, and neither laws nor monuments, neither battleships, nor public libraries, nor great newspapers, nor booming stocks; neither mechanical invention, nor political adroitness, nor churches, nor universities, nor civil service examinations can save us from degeneration if the inner mystery is lost.

That mystery, at once the secret and the glory of the English-speaking race, consists in nothing but two common habits, two inveterate habits carried into public life—habits so homely that they lend themselves to no retorical expression, yet habits more precious, perhaps than any that the human race has gained. They can never be too often pointed out or praised. One of them is the habit of trained and disciplined good temper toward the opposite party when it fairly wins its innings. . . The other is that fierce and merciless resentment toward every man or set of men who break the public peace.

The great American educator has here laid bare the fundamentals of democracy—good sportsmanship, and reverence for the public will.
